

New Mexico Senora Runs For Congress

Dark Velvet Eyes, Heritage From Old Spain, Flash Rebellion at Idea That Women Avoid Politics and Live in Seclusion

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—A senora of noble Spanish descent is slated to be a member of the next national house of representatives if Republican political fortunes hold good in New Mexico, where today ancient Castilian ideas are clashing with modern feminism.

Spanish notions persisting through many dusty years in that state are being irreverently flouted by women politicians, many of them daughters of old Mexican families. These names have ruled New Mexico since conquistadores first crossed the Rio Grande in the sixteenth century.

Mrs. Adelina Otero-Warren, who has just received the Republican nomination for congress, was born in New Mexico, a member of the famous Luna and Otero families. It is expected that the chief opposition to her election will come from the conservative element, who cling to the old Spanish tradition that women should dwell in monastic seclusion, seldom venturing upon the street, much less taking part in public life. Over fifty per cent of the inhabitants of the state are of Mexican and pure Spanish descent.

DARK EYES FLASHING

Dark velvet eyes, a rich heritage from old Spain, are flashing rebellion at antiquated ideas. The senorita residing in the free, invigorating air of New Mexico refuse to be bound down any longer by traditions transplanted from an ancient civilization into the new world a couple of centuries ago. They have beaten down the bars of Spanish windows, flung wide the shutters, and they slide today from their confining balconies to mingle on the same plane with the men. They have a host of friends who wish them happiness.

Miss Andra Knudson entertained Saturday evening at her home in compliance to Raymond Grant, who will leave Wednesday for Berkeley, Cal., to attend school. A color scheme of red and white was carried out in the house decorations, and a bowl of red geraniums centered the table where supper was served. The guests enjoyed dancing at the Academy of Music and dainty refreshments followed.
